Evaluation of Articles

Articles are first pre-evaluated by the editors in terms of publication rules. Articles that do not comply with the publication rules are sent back for correction. Articles that comply with the publication rules are subject to a double-blind peer-review process. The article that is decided to be evaluated by the editor(s) is usually sent to at least two referees. All documents accepted for consideration for publication are reviewed as confidential documents. In accordance with the principle of confidentiality, the information of the authors with the referees and the information of the referees with the authors are not shared except as permitted by the editor(s). In addition, opinions and suggestions obtained through peer-review should be kept confidential, and reviewers should identify cases where the published work cited in the article is not cited in the reference section. After the corrections made as a result of the evaluations of the appointed referees are corrected by the author/authors, the article is ready for publication. A third referee is appointed if one of the referees gives a positive opinion and the other a negative opinion,
